Layout Notes

1. I started with a big piece of art located in the outside/middle of the page. This captures the reader's eye and pulls her to the page. The artwork goes with a story about the Valentine Party and I located the story next to the artwork.
2. I know my market is interested in its young people, and I located the story about the youth service at the top of the page. I believe this story will help the page's readership.
3. My longest story, for this page, was one about missionaries. It's best to have a big story at the bottom of the page as an anchor. It's poor layout to have a bunch of stories sitting on top of a smaller-sized story. Visually, the smaller story can't support the weight.
4. Because I use a modular layout style - I lay out my page in blocks - it's important to counter that with ragged right type. Note the type is not justified in blocks.
5. Notice the headlines are in subject-verb sentence format.
6. Notice the type size and the type font are the same. Don't mix and match.
7. In the Missionaries story, I needed to include another piece of artwork. Notice how I balanced the page by locating this piece of artwork on the inside of the page - diagonally balancing it with the larger Valentine's artwork. If all of your artwork is on the same side of the page, visually the page feels heavy on that side.
8. Each story ends with direction. Short stories are best - invite people to visit the website for more information or to call someone in the church.
9. Page numbers are always on the outside of the page; I balanced that with the church's web address.
